Guide to Revocation Counselling

For many people, gaming is a form of recreation. However, for some, the time and money spent on gaming can affect many aspects of their life including relationships with family and friends.

After not gaming for a long period of time, it is easy to forget the impact that gaming was having on your life when you opted to self exclude. Through counselling you will be able to explore this and understand why your gaming became problematic. With your counsellor, you will be able to discuss your readiness to return to the Casino in a safe and controlled manner and put in place strategies which will help you reduce the risks of returning to problematic gaming behaviour.

During counselling, you will need to discuss openly:

- your previous gaming behaviour;
- the circumstances of your self exclusion and why you decided to self exclude;
- counselling you have had since self excluding, if any;
- any breaches of your self exclusion;
- why you would like to revoke (end) your self exclusion;
- your current situation and readiness to return to gaming;
- what strategies (plan) you have for a safe and controlled return to gaming; and
- your support network for your application and return to gaming.

Problem gaming is often related to life stressors or emotional issues. If you decide, your Counsellor can also assist with these and help you to improve your personal relationships, which are often damaged due to problem gaming. The overall experience can have a very positive impact on your quality of life.
